See 5 investing tips that may be right for you

Educating yourself is a smart move. And it only takes a few minutes to gain helpful tips. No matter how new or experienced you are at investing, keep your long-term retirement goal in mind. What do you hope to do during retirement? Perhaps you look forward to more time enjoying your current lifestyle. Or you may want to travel or take on new adventures. Regardless of your plans, you'll want to consider how much income you'll need to make them happen.

1 Investing early

Want to begin investing, but don't have much to get started? That's OK. Starting early, even with a small amount, may result in higher savings over time. For example, let's see how 30 years of contributing $50 biweekly versus 15 years impacted Sam's retirement savings:

Like all good habits, it's easier to start off right than it is to try to make up for lost time later. As you develop sound savings habits, the easier it will be to save more as you earn more.

The chart is for illustrative purposes only. The total employee contribution after 30 years is $39,000 (starting at age 25) and $19,500 (starting at age 40). The retirement balance (potential future value) assumes a 7% annual rate of return on their savings. The assumed rate of return in this chart is hypothetical and does not guarantee any future returns nor represent the returns of any particular investment. Amounts do not reflect the impact of taxes on pre-tax distributions. Individual taxpayer circumstances may vary.

2 Diversifying your investments

Hoping to make the most of the dollars you're investing? Selecting a variety of investments from different asset classes or "risk levels" — also known as diversification — may help reduce the ups and downs of investing. A simple truth: Investments and the market are typically impacted continuously by environmental, economical and political changes. Some changes have a positive impact and others have a negative impact.

By diversifying your investments, you may be able to minimize the potential negative impacts — and maximize the potentially positive impacts. It's important to know that asset allocation and diversification do not ensure a profit or protect against a loss.

3 Knowing your comfort level with risk and your years to retirement

Risk and years to retirement are probably not on your list of favorite topics. But when these two are aligned, they may help you make informed investment choices. If you're nearing retirement, you may not want to take on much risk, and you may be more comfortable with investments that typically have lower risk levels and return potential. However, if you have several years until retirement, you may be willing to take on more risk — and may be comfortable with investments that offer generally higher growth potential. Keep in mind, with higher growth potential, there is also the potential for a greater loss.

4 Keeping your investment selections in line

Do you ever wonder if your investments are on track? Over time, markets change and some investment options may perform better and grow faster than others — causing your investment mix to differ from what you originally selected.

Rebalancing can help reset your investment options based on your original goals.

1 Let's say you started here:

60% stocks
40% bonds

2 But due to market activity, you ended up here:

75% stocks
25% bonds

3 To get your mix of investments back to the percentages you started with, you rebalance your investment elections back to here:

60% stocks
40% bonds

You have a few options when it comes to rebalancing:

- Rebalancing as life events occur.
- Choosing to automatically rebalance your account — quarterly, semiannually or annually — based on which time frame fits your personal financial goals.
- Or maybe you've decided that the shift in value of investments is actually more in line with your future goals — that's OK too. You don't have to rebalance.

5 Avoiding emotional decisions

Do you panic at the thought of market ups and downs? You're not alone. Individuals generally feel a bit nervous as they watch the market in action. You can't control market volatility, but understanding that it's a normal part of investing might help lessen its impact on your retirement by sticking with your long-term plan.

History tells us that over time the market generally bounces back from periods of volatility. Even the worst market declines have generally been followed by a significant recovery. A year after the 2008/2009 market drop, it rebounded by 53.6%

As you invest, keep these tips in mind.
